'Be the change that you wish to see in the world'

(Mahatma Gandhi)

School exam season in Greece has arrived. But for many now facing the final year tests, the stress is twofold: last minute continuous studying and the knowledge that they'll soon enter the worst job climate in Europe. At high schools in several European countries, dreams have been put on hold. The school leavers wish for a stable job, for a future full of opportunity. But, instead, unemployment and uncertainty await.

Par 1

The economic crisis and the strict financial measures have led to a devastating effect on youth. Greek emigration to Germany jumped by more than 40% last year. 'I don't want to leave my friends and family,' 23-year-old Christina says. 'Abroad, I will struggle to find friends, at least in the first year. But I have no other choice. It's a sacrifice I'm willing to make because I can't find anything hopeful here.' Luckily, among the students, some are optimistic. One thinks of leaving the city for the countryside, another of going into farming because of a lack of opportunities. Alexandros, 17, says with a smile, 'It will be very difficult to get a job in my own country but not impossible; I will try really hard. Maybe, with God's help, I'll succeed.'

Par 2

Some young hopefuls are even fighting back. One success story is GloVo, recently started by a group of entrepreneurs in their twenties. GloVo is a global volunteers' platform that finds volunteers for large events. GloVo's name stands for Global Volunteers, and its values are passion, responsibility, integrity, motivation and enjoyment. Their vision is to create a global volunteers' community with certain values which will offer experience to volunteers and quality to events.

Par 3

According to co-founder Aris Konstantinidis, young people must not accept the curse of unemployment. 'Many people think that there is no way out of the financial crisis,' he says, 'but I think it's an opportunity to go out of our comfort zone, shape our future and get rid of all the old negative ways of doing things. We want young people to be able to take part in life and to stand on their own two feet.' Eleni, 21, has been volunteering for GloVo and says she's trying to get as much experience as she can. She thinks of the jobless situation all the time and highlights that volunteering is the only way to overcome the crisis. She points out that young people have to go forward and fight. 'Unless they stop and ask what's happening or what they are going to do, nothing will improve,' she concludes.

Par 4

Undoubtedly, nowadays, it is very difficult, especially for young people, to add working experience to their CV—Biographical Statement—because of the economic crisis. At the same time, volunteering experience is receiving more and more respect. For this reason, volunteering is a great way to make one's CV stand out from all the rest.

Par 5

Employers appreciate voluntary work because it shows that young volunteers are active members of society and have lots of interests and the willingness to offer. For example, the social networking service LinkedIn has already added a different category for volunteering experience. It is not unusual for a volunteer to be employed after contributing to an event. That's because during an event volunteers can show how hard-working they are and which skills or values they possess. If they do what they have to do and fulfil their duties, people are going to respect it, and observant employers are going to have them in mind for future working positions in their company.

Par 6

Facing the crisis takes energy and determination. Luckily, this ancient nation is full of youthful vitality.
